The incident occurred at the Wells Fargo at 11230 Elm Lane when one suspect brandished two firearms while the other suspect removed money from the counter. Ninety seconds of video from the robbery was tweeted by Charlotte-Mecklenburg Police Thursday, showing the two first burst through the front doors covering themselves with a black umbrella. The two tossed the umbrella aside as soon as they entered and one stepped forward and began pointing two pistols at the staff, yelling demands. A second robber, dressed in black, then began collecting money in a bag, jumping over the counter at one point. Both had their faces covered, with the one appearing to be wearing a hoodie backwards, with holes cut for his eyes. One female bank employee can be seen in the in video with her hands in the air, as the robbers ordered her to come out from behind a desk. Investigators have not said how much the suspects got away with or if anyone was hurt during the robbery.
